H. E. MISCHKE, Agt.

RAM'S HORN WRINKLES.

God alone knows how much has been lost when a man dies without ever having done anything toward making the world better than he found it.

The truth we hate the most is the one that hits us the hardest.

Don't be in a hurry to go security for the man who takes no newspaper and keeps three dogs.

It will make the pull all the harder to remember your troubles and forget your blessings.

About the easiest thing for a fool to do is to tell how little he knows.

The man with his head in the clouds will often be found standing with his feet on some other man's neck.

The man who has a business for which he cannot pray, sometimes makes too much noise in church.

The man who does wrong suffers, but those who love him suffer more.

A man with a bad memory needs good legs.

Whether we reach heaven or not will be determined by what we love, not by what we know.

If there is no sunshine in your religion, don't be surprised if nobody wants it.

We would all read the Bible more if we were more anxious to live as it tells us to do.

The sounding brass and tinkling cymbal business is still being worked for all it is worth.

BUSINESS END TO MUSIC IN GOOD YANKEE DOLLARS

There is a business end to music. Yesterday afternoon the German band was playing just before dinner selections from the Fatherland. It was just too late. The Kaiser had gone. And the square responded not at all to the appeal. There was not a copper flung from a boarding-house window. And then—you could see inspiration in the bandmaster's eye. They had the card up their sleeve. The German band started with "The Star-Spangled Banner" and went on to "Yankee Doodle." Heads peeped out from blinded windows. Then it was "Dixie," and the doors opened. After that it was "John Brown's Body" and "Hail, Columbia." By that time the doorsteps were crowded with the strangers within our rather dismal Bloomsbury gates, and the German band found Bloomsbury blossoming in good American dollars.—[London Chronicle.]

"MERE PLEASANTRY"—A POPULAR PRACTICE

Having exploded a dynamite bomb under the carriage, the howling mob seizes the occupants as they attempt to flee.

The man they tie hand and foot, first rubbing soot upon his face and daubing paint grotesquely over his garments. They fling him into an empty box car and allow him to be carried to unknown parts by a freight train.

The sobbing woman they thrust into a waiting automobile and rush away with her to a deserted house, into which they push her, then lock the door, going away with demoniac shrieks of laughter.

And what are these, do you ask? Are they Turkish brigands or Malay pirates or Black Hand Men, or what?

None of these, O friend. This is simply a merry, friendly wedding custom in our enlightened, civilized land.—[Chicago Post.]

CHAINED CONVICTS CRUSHED IN "BULL PEN" COLLAPSE

Four convicts were killed, twelve seriously injured and fourteen convicts and three guards slightly injured recently in the collapse of a "bullpen" near Waterville, N. C., in the heart of the Smokies, the only remaining mountain pass to the East. The convicts were all negroes who were being worked in connection with the construction of the transcontinental railway.

Capt. J. E. Hoskins, of Raleigh, who was in charge of the prisoners, went down with them and had to be dug from the debris. He suffered painful injuries. Guards J. E. Nichols and Ed McKenney were slightly injured.

The "bullpen" was built entirely of heavy logs and the weight of the roof caused it to collapse. The structure slid down the mountain side without warning for sixty-five feet. A special was sent from Newport, Tenn., with physicians and nurses and coffins for the dead, to the scene. The injured were taken to Newport under guard and the dead will be sent to Raleigh, where the State penitentiary is located.

The fact that every convict was burdened with ball and chain rendered the victims helpless and is responsible for the great number of injured.

WHEN WITTY WAITER AND JOKING ACTOR MEET

Scamp Montgomery, who plays the "bus driver" in "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," says he went into a quick lunch place the other day and asked for chicken pie, says the New York Telegraph.

"Oh, you're a pirate, eh?" he said.

"No," Scamp replied, "merely a church member who is pious."

"Who makes these pies?" Scamp asked, when the order was placed before him.

"I forgot his name," said the waiter, "but he was a crusty old fellow."

"Why don't you go on the stage?" Scamp asked, frowning.

"The stage would never do," the waiter said. "I'm going to be a chimney sweep."

"Chimney sweep—why?" asked the actor man.

"Well," the waiter said, "I think that job would suit me."

Scamp certainly was mad. He examined the pie closely. "Say," he called to the waiter-comedian, "what's the matter with this pie?"

"Oh, any answer would do," said the man in the apron.

"No! I mean it. There's no chicken in this thing."

"Well, say, friend," came from the waiter, "you wouldn't expect to find a dog in a dog biscuit, would you?"

Scamp had no more to say. When he finished he went to the cashier to pay his bill.

"What's the name of the fellow who waited on me?" he asked.

"Jester," she replied.

"Well, he's too fresh," said Scamp.

"I think so too," said the girl. He's my husband."

The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address, F. J. A GLIMPSE INTO MAGICAL FUTURE

As Foretold by Wizard Thos. A. Edison.

STEAM POWER NEAR THE END

And Traveler of the Future Will Largely Scorn Earth-Crawling.

LIGHT METAL WILL BE KING

What will the world be like a hundred years hence?

None but a "wizard" dare raise the future; and what wizard can do it with so sure a hand as Thomas Alva Edison, who has wrested so many secrets from jealous Nature? He alone of all men who live has the necessary gift of courage and foresight, and he has not shrunk from venture. Already, Edison tells us, the steam engine is emitting its last gasps. A century hence it will be as remote and antiquated as the lumbering coach of Tudor days, which took a week to travel from Yorkshire to London. In the year 2011 such railway trains as survive will be driven at incredible speed by electricity (which will also be the motive force of all the world's machinery,) generated by "hydraulic" wheels.

But the traveler of the future will largely scorn such earth-crawling. He will fly through the air, swifter than any swallow, at a speed of two hundred miles an hour, in colossal machines which will enable him to breakfast in London, transact business in Paris, and eat his luncheon in Cheapside.

The house of the next century will be furnished from basement to attic with steel, at a sixth of the present cost—of steel so light that it will be as easy to move a sideboard as it is to-day to lift a drawing-room chair. The baby of the twenty-first century will be rocked in a steel cradle, his father will sit in a steel chair at a steel dining-table; and his mother's boudoir will be sumptuously equipped with steel furnishings, converted by cunning varnishes to the semblance of rosewood or mahogany, or any other wood her ladyship fancies.

Books of the coming century will all be printed leaves of nickel, so light to hold that the reader can enjoy a small library in a single volume. A book two inches thick will contain forty thousand pages, the equivalent of a hundred volumes; six inches, in aggregate thickness, would suffice for all the contents of the "Encyclopaedia Britannica." And each volume would weigh less than a pound.

Already Mr. Edison can produce a pound-weight of these nickel leaves, more flexible than paper, and ten times as durable, at a cost of five shillings. In a hundred years' time the cost will probably be reduced to a tenth.

More amazing still, this American wizard sounds the death-knell of gold as a precious metal. "Gold," he says, "has even now but a few years to live; the day is near when bars of it will be as common and as cheap as bars of iron or blocks of steel." We are already on the verge of discovering the secret of transmuting metals, which are all substantially the same in matter, though "combined in different proportions." Before long it will be an easy matter to convert a truck-load of iron bars into as many bars of virgin gold.

In these magical days to come there is no reason why our great liners should not be sold from stem to stern; why we should not ride in golden taxicabs; or substitute gold for steel in our drawing-room suites. Only, steel will be the more durable, and thus the cheaper in the long run.

And in the world of manufacture the changes of the next hundred years will be just as revolutionary. Where we have now a score of machines, each responsible for a stage of manufacture, one will suffice.

"Before long," says Mr. Edison, without a twinkle in his eye, and certainly without his tongue in his cheek, "we shall have a machine into one end of which you will put cloth, thread, buttons, and so on, and from the other end draw suits complete to the last stitch, and ready folded for delivery."

All our present marvels of phonograph and telephone and aerial telegraphy are but blind grovings in the dark compared with the light that shall flood the next century.

The Briton of 2011 will be able to sit in his armchair and converse with his son at the Cape, or with a friend in Melbourne, as easily as across the hearthrug; and not merely to listen to his friend's or son's voice, but to see each of them as clearly as if he were in the same room.

POEMS YOU'LL ENJOY.

The Herald's Special Selections.

THERE WERE SEVEN MEN.

There were seven men, and one was a fool.

And one was the boss of a country school;

The third was a man with a wondrous brain,

The fourth was a crook, and the fifth insane,

The sixth was a preacher, the seventh a knave,

And they all were bound for the self-same grave.

The fool, as Time whirled its weary way,

Became a professor, honored and gray;

The schoolmaster worked from his low position

And became a national politician;

The brainy chap lost his mind; the crook

Became a priest, with his cowl and Book—

And the crazy man recovered his mind,

While the knave took to saving his fellow-kind;

And only one stuck to his trade, of the seven—

The preacher kept preaching of Hell and Heaven.

There were seven men, there were seven minds,

There were seven humans of seven kinds;

And none who had known in their early days

These men, who traveled their seven ways,

Would have thought that the crook would a parson be,

Or the knave would take up humanity.

But you never can tell—and the moral is here:

Don't accept things always as they appear.

For under the gristle and skin and bone

Is something that works in a way of its own—

And you never may know the saint from the knave

This side of the edge of the common grave.

Smoke curling up from the farmhouse chimney as the men are coming in from the fields, gives a pretty suggestion of a good supper and a comfortable home. But it also means a hot, tired woman, working hard over a blazing fire.

A New Perfection keeps a kitchen many degrees cooler than any other range, yet it does all a coal or wood range can do. It saves time, labor and fuel. No wood to cut; no coal to carry; no ashes; no soot. With the New Perfection oven it is the best cooking device you can find anywhere.

Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners, with long, turquoise blue enameled chimneys. Handsomely finished throughout. The 2- and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without a cabinet top, which is fitted with deep shelves, towel racks, etc.
